This service-learning course emphasizes the importance of active learning both in the classroom and in the community. As the practice of community-based archival efforts continues to grow, students will be introduced to the important role that archiving and related community cultural documentation practices can play in preserving the history of notable South Carolina women activists. This reciprocal professional experience is regularly recorded throughout the 20 hours of service in student individual reflective Journals. Additionally, students will study the legal and ethical responsibilities and codes of conduct related to the profession of archiving.
